

AMERICAN POLITICS AND POLITICAL ECONOMY
Benjamin I. Page, Series Editor

NEWS THAT MATTERS

Shanto Iyengar and
Donald R. Kinder

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS
CHICAGO AND LONDON

01008900

Contents

SHANTO IYENGAR is associate professor of political science at the State University of New York, Stony Brook. DONALD R. KINDER is professor of political science and psychology at the University of Michigan.

The University of Chicago Press, Chicago 60637
The University of Chicago Press, Ltd., London

© 1987 by The University of Chicago
All rights reserved. Published 1987
Printed in the United States of America
96 95 94 93 92 91 90 89 88 87 54321

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Iyengar, Shanto.

News that matters.

(American politics and political economy)

Bibliography: p.

Includes index.

1. Television broadcasting of news—Political aspects—United States. 2. Television broadcasting of news—United States—Psychological aspects. 3. Television and politics—United States. 4. Public opinion—United States. I. Kinder, Donald R. II. Title.
PN4888.T4I94 1987 302.2'345 86-30845
ISBN 0-226-38856-5

Acknowledgments	vii
1 A Primordial Power?	1
2 Pathways to Knowledge: Experimentation and the Analysis of Television's Power	6
3 The Agenda-Setting Effect	16
4 Vivid Cases and Lead Stories	34
5 Personal Predicaments and National Problems	47
6 Victims of Agenda-Setting	54
7 The Priming Effect	63
8 Priming and Presidential Character	73
9 Priming and Presidential Responsibility	82
10 Victims of Priming	90
11 Electoral Consequences of Priming	98
12 News That Matters	112
Appendix A	136
Appendix B	138
Notes	155
Bibliography	173
Index	183

MAY 17 1988

Acknowledgments

This book is the product of an extended collaboration that began at Yale University in 1979 and ended, thanks only to the miracle of word processing, about five minutes ago with Iyengar in Stony Brook and Kinder in Palo Alto. Along this long road, we incurred many debts.

In the early days, when we were not yet fully persuaded that the political effects of television could be studied usefully by experimental means, Robert Abelson and William McGuire provided essential and much appreciated encouragement. Since then, many people have offered advice. Much of it was enlightened; some of it we took. For wading through early versions of the book, red pencils in hand, we would like to thank Edie Goldenberg, Michael MacKuen, Warren Miller, Benjamin Page, Ellen Robb, and Janet Weiss. Don Herzog, Samuel Popkin, and Steven Rosenstone went far beyond the call of collegial duty. Their detailed and thoughtful reactions improved the book and enriched our understanding of our own work. We hope someday to return the favor.

We were also blessed with exceptional graduate student assistants. At Yale, Mark Peters and Roy Behr not only managed the running of our experiments but also contributed significantly to our thinking about television and politics. We are particularly grateful to Behr for allowing us to use a portion of his dissertation research. At Michigan, Jon Krosnick was a tireless analyst and kibitzer whose relentless questioning strengthened the work (and, in time, our friendship).

Our experiments necessitated the use of sophisticated audiovisual facilities and equipment. The late Frank Dendas, director of the Yale Television Studio, gave generously of his time and expertise, and welcomed us to the Studio's remarkable facilities. Lawrence Grippo, then a Yale undergraduate, skillfully "created" our newscasts, somehow kept track of our overflowing collection of videotapes, and ably assisted in the running of experiments. We would also like to thank the hundreds of people in New Haven and Ann Arbor who saw fit to participate in our studies. Without their cooperation, this book could not have been written. As chair of the department of political science at Yale, David Mayhew helped us find necessary resources. We are also grateful to